Apple Time Flies focused on the Apple Watch Series 6, Apple Watch SE, and the new iPad and iPad Air. While we haven't received any updates on the iPhone 12, which is slated to roll out to four models next month, we do you have one. Get an idea of just how powerful the new flagship will be as Apple dives into the details of its new A14 Bionic processor that will debut in the iPad Air. The iPhone 11 uses the A13 processor. Chip, but Apple's demo focused on comparing the A14 to the A12 that powers the current iPad Air, but AnandTech (opens in new tab) crunched the numbers to see what upgrades we can expect between the iPhone 11 and the iPhone Watch. 12. According to the publication, the A14 processor is 16% faster than the A13 and offers a slight 8.3% performance increase with the GPU. The new 16-core neural engine is twice as fast as the A12, which is 83% faster than the A13. The 5nm SoC is an industry first, putting Apple ahead of its Android rivals and their 7nm SoCs. As a result, we expected more impressive gains over the A13, but it's likely that the chip's energy will be channeled towards lower power consumption for maximum efficiency. Hopefully this will be clarified at the iPhone 12 event, where Apple will highlight the advantages of the A14 against the A13 head-to-head, so fans can see what improvements they can expect to encourage them to upgrade. Apple may be behind when it comes to the design of its smartphone, but the flagship processor will make up for the leads when it comes to power.
