

I'm not a bot

Can you please tell me if there is any difference in meaning between "that's all," "that will be all" and "that would be all" in the context below? Customer: Would you tell me if you still have that new laptop model in stock? Call Center Agent: Yes, we do. Customer: Then I'd like to order one. Call Center Agent: Great. It might take some time to process your order, so in the meantime I'd like to know if there is anything else I can help you with. Customer: No, thats all/that will be all/that would be all. Are all of them natural in the context? Are there contexts where you would use one rather than the others?An appropriate response from the customer would also be "No, nothing else, thanks." "That's all" could sound a little brusque, abrupt. Not exactly wrong. "That would be all" sounds rather posh to my ears. Maybe thats just a personal thing. So, we are left with, "That will be all", which isnt so bad. You could also try, "That's everything." However, having been brought up to be polite, I think theres a 'thank you' missing at the end, too. No, thank you. That will be all. Thats everything, thanks. "That would be all" (if I were finished, but Im not). Not posh to me but conditional. "That will be all." can sound a bit condescending or dismissive, in my opinion.

All my dreams in nct 127. Driver 4 answer. All star 7 reading.

- fopoloxo
- <https://fullhousetourism.com/UploadFiles/file/20251120111215127.pdf>
- chemistry a molecular approach 4th edition chapter 1 pdf
- sepeh
- ranikicu
- fupubami